DID Press: Iran warned that its next military response to Israel could be "decisive" and "finish the job" if Israel strikes again, Politico reported, citing sources familiar with the matter.

Tensions between Iran and Israel have intensified after recent exchanges of missile and drone attacks, reaching what analysts describe as an unprecedented level of hostility.

According to the report, Iranian officials signaled that any future retaliation may involve the use of electromagnetic pulse (EMP) weapons designed to disable Israel's power and communication systems.

Politico report has not been confirmed or denied by Iranian officials. Military experts say EMP weapons can disrupt critical infrastructure without causing physical destruction, posing a significant threat to national security.
